S. B. Locke, of the firm of Whitcomb & Locke, has closed his business here. He returns to his home at West Paris. He is to run the grist mill which he owns at that place. He has already commenced business there. Mr. Locke has been here about two years and has made many friends, who are sorry to have him leave town. The school house is nearly completed. The contractor, John A. Greenleaf of Auburn, finished up his part last week and has returned home. It is now the business of the miller and will be ready for occupying in a couple of weeks or less. We now have a school building of which we may well be proud. It is large enough to hold enough of modern pattern. There are four large rooms, high posted, well ventilated and supplied with blackboards. The lavatories are spacious and supplied with wardrobes for the students. There is a large recitation room up stairs connected with the main room. The building is water-tight to the windows throughout. M. M. Fuller has charge of putting in the seats, and Stephen Poole of the painting. Considerable grading in the school yard is necessary, and we hope a few more trees may be set out there this fall. There is room for them. The fall outlay on the building will not come far from $3800.

The Norway Grange had their first picnic of the season on Friday of last week at the residence of John Baker. The day was fine, the night calm and the picnic assembled with baskets well filled with just such things as is always necessary to the real enjoyment of a basket picnic. Thirty-six carriages were used to convey the company, and one hundred and eight persons were present. Mrs. Baker furnished the coffee and the several groups seated around the shade of trees. All seemed happy in being blessed with such capacity for enjoying the contents of the baskets. Mr. Baker has a very large farm, and would judge by appearance that he is a model farmer. His barns are well filled with hay and grain, and the stock of cattle is of choice Durham grade. One bull calf, seven months old, measures four and one half feet, and is a splendid animal. The orchards are old, and the fruit has been much injured by hail this season, but there is a great abundance of fruit and many choice varieties. All agreed that it was a good place for a picnic, and with feelings of pleasure and cheerful good byes the company separated, all hoping to meet again on a like occasion.

A Journey with the White Horse.

We left the metropolis of Oxford County late in the afternoon for Locke's Mills via J. A. Bolster cutting second crop of oats, we forgot which, some where near his old farm, which he sold to C. A. Stephens, the author. There were some notable changes made on the road. The old barn of the farm, built in the rear of the house, and across the road from the house have been taken down. A neat and commodious stable of modern style has been built in the rear of the house, and seems to be an agreeable pastime for literary people who have gained a coming by the work of pen and brain.

Mr. Stephens has a wife and two children. His father and mother live with him and it is a very happy family of three generations.

"Gus" Bolster would neither lend us tobacco or tell us of his last ride in the Pasture land estate. Evidently it is not running for office this year. Greenwood is a large town and is noted for many peculiarities. It has a diversified vegetation than any other town in Maine. If it is not in the United States. This is on the authority of Prof. Verill of Yale College. He has made careful and critical examination of the flora here and gives the above as his opinion. "Rockyland," the ice caves, the bottomless mud (so-called), "The House Rock," "Island Pond No. 12," and other attractions make this a popular resort for tourists. "The City" is now known in history only, and in the stories of the olden times. There is a store here and post-office. We examined some sweet corn from the field of I. F. Emmons, trader and postmaster, for the season. Mr. E. has thirteen swarms of bees, and they are in a flourishing condition. His apple trees are loaded with fruit and the quality of several we tested as did the horse.
